(54): WATER PURIFICATION DEVICE COMPRISING A GRAVITY- FED FILTER

(51) Int.Cl.8: C 02F 1/00, 1/28, 1/44, 1/68, 1/76

(57): The present invention relates to water purification devices, particularly to gravity- fed water purification devices that operate without electricity and pressurised water. The invention relates to a gravity- fed water purification device comprising a chamber (3) that has the sediment filter (6), also has a compartment (7) that surrounds the sediment filter (6). The compartment (7) has sidewalls (16) rising upwardly from bottom of the chamber (3) to define an open top with a rim having a notch (7a). The compartment (7) is spaced apart from the walls of the chamber (3) to define a space around the compartment (7). Preferred devices were surprisingly found to solve the problem of tapering -off of the flow- rate from the device over a period of use, and the need to frequently back wash the carbon block filter (9), particularly under conditions of poor water quality and at the same time provide the required residence time for the chemical purifying agent to act on the pathogens.

(54) Title: A method of synthesiting a complex $[MN(NNS)_2]$ active against the malaria parasite plasmodium falciparum

(51) Int.Cl.8:

(57) Abstract: Metal complex of Manganese(II) containing a dithio-based ligand have been synthesized and characterized by elemental analysis, mass spectrometry, Proton NMR and FT-IR spectrometry. A single crystal X-ray structure of the cadmium complex has been analyzed. The metal complex was subjected to biological tests on falcipain-2 (FP-2) and falcipain-3 (FP-3) cysteine protease enzymes from the malaria parasite Plasmodium falciparum. They were further tested in vitro against chloroquine resistant strain (W2). Whereas the potency of the metal complexes was weaker than the control regarding the FP-2 and FP-3, the potency of metal complexes was found to be exceedingly greater than the control when tested against the chloroquine resistant strain (W2) with a strength ratio of 132.2. This paper describes the synthesis, characterization and biological results of the said metal complex containing deprotonated 3-[1-(2-pyridyl) ethylidene] hydrazinecarbodithioate ligand (Fig. 1).

(57) Abstract: A lock is disclosed for use within an attachment system that connects a ground engaging tool to a bucket lip. The bucket lip has a lug attached thereto, and the ground engaging tool having a recess which receives the lug in use. The lock is disposed, in use, between the lug and the ground engaging tool. The lock has a body, a force applying member and a force receiving member, such that the application of force by the force applying member causes the force receiving member to protrude from a first side of the body and to engage the lug. The present invention involves providing a preferred failure mode for the lock. The lock is constructed so that the relative hardnesses of the lug, the body, the force applying member and the force receiving member are such that the application of a sufficiently large force via the lug to the protruding portion of the force receiving member will preferentially cause deformation of the protruding portion of the compressing member ahead of deformation of the body or the force applying member.

When a user equipment as a connection terminating point receives a connection initialization message with a media flow, such as audio, which cannot be delivered by the packet switched access, it sends a specific response rejecting the connection via the packet switched access to an application server for service centralization and continuity. In the application server, it is checked whether several conditions are met in order to determine whether the communication connection comprising the media flow is allowed to be changed to the circuit switched domain. If yes, the communication connection is changed from the packet switched communication domain to the circuit switched communication domain.

(57) The invention is in the area of transport and traffic systems and design of roads and highways, with an inventive step added to roundabouts by way of a jacket encompassing the inner lane of the road. The invention incorporates today's round-about as we know it and adds an inventive step to it by adding a jacket to it on at two opposite sides, lying in parallel or flush position with the main stream of traffic, along the line of movement of the inner lane. Ideally the jacket should start and end 10 to 20 meters before the curve into the round-about. The effect of the jacket is to:

(d) limit the available turning options of vehicle traffic to only 180 degrees in two opposite directions; the action of which ensures that vehicle streams from the two allowed inner lanes will never really block each other, creating an interlocking conveyor belt motion for ease of traffic.

(e) ensure that streams of traffic from adjacent sides that are joining the main stream of traffic cannot cut across to go to the opposite outlet. To do that they have to manoeuvre through the next round-about and negotiate 180 degrees through the strait jacket covering the inner lane.

(f) Ensure that streams of traffic on the outer lanes and intending to proceed straight through the intersection do not get any interruption. The only little bit of interruption being cars from adjacent lanes but joining into the flow straight on. This can only be of negligible effect to the overall speed of cars moving straight on.
